Re: Blackstone and Macmillan Publishing Boycott

For more than 100 years, Yolo County Library has provided communities with access to ideas that inform, entertain and inspire. Last year we interacted with our residents more than two million times – they borrowed free materials, visited our branches and website, and participated in our programs.

Yolo County Library is dedicated to providing free access to digital materials, including eBooks and eAudiobooks. However, our ability to connect patrons to digital materials is threatened.

Blackstone Publishing embargoed eAudiobook titles from purchase by public libraries for 90 days after their release date. Yolo County Library, along with libraries in Arizona, Idaho, Pennsylvania and Texas, joined the Washington Digital Library Consortium's boycott of Blackstone Publishing's eAudiobooks for six months in response to this prohibition on library purchases.

Macmillan Publishing, one of the country's biggest publishers, recently launched a library eBook embargo; its new digital content terms for libraries will allow libraries to purchase a single perpetual-access eBook copy of each new Macmillan title for the first eight weeks after a book's release. After eight weeks, libraries can then license additional copies for $60 per copy for a term of two years or 52 lends, whichever comes first. Yolo County Library finds these terms unacceptable and is boycotting the purchase of new Macmillan eBooks for six months. This boycott is effective November 1, 2019 and will run through April 30, 2020.

Blackstone and Macmillan are preventing public libraries from purchasing new eAudiobooks and eBooks when they are released, thereby creating barriers to access for patrons. The publishers' justification for this action is that they lose sales to libraries as customers forego buying and borrow instead. However, studies suggest that libraries are an essential part of the publishing ecosystem that promotes books, reading, and learning.

One study compiled by the Panorama Project showed that 50% of all library users report purchasing books by an author they were introduced to in the library. Patrons “try out” books at the library and then go back and purchase their favorites for their personal libraries and as gifts.

Yolo County Librarian Mark Fink noted, “we are concerned about the pattern we see, with publishers creating barriers for libraries and limiting access for library patrons. We are using our purchasing power to communicate to Macmillan, Blackstone and other publishers that libraries have an ethical obligation to maximize patron access to materials and get the best possible value for our taxpayer dollars. We will not support publishers who impede patron access as it puts these obligations at risk.”

Yolo County Library will continue to purchase Blackstone and Macmillan products in other formats that are not impacted by the embargoes. We will continue to add new eBook and eAudiobook content to the digital collection, choosing items from other publishers. Previously-published Macmillan eBooks and Blackstone eAudiobooks already in the digital collection will not be affected.

We encourage you to stand with us and work toward a more just outcome for the greater reading community. Tens of thousands of readers have already added their names to a petition launched by the American Library Association at eBooksForAll.org.
